Translation:

Curiosity, a blessing or a headache? Definitely a blessing and for many reasons we will be discussing in this episode.

Many parents get annoyed when their kids ask them a lot of questions, why is this like that, and why is that like that. And while I was preparing for this episode, I came across a proverb bi2o1, "Curiosity killed the cat." Usually this saying is said when someone asks a lot of questions. But according to several studies, a curious person is usually a successful person. Einstein said, "I have no special talent, I'm only passionately curious." In a documentary called, "Steve Jobs: One Last Thing." They said, "Mr. Jobs wasn't curious about things that would make him successful. He was successful because he was so curious."

Frida Kahlo, a Mexican painter was also very curious. Akira Kurosawa a Japanese director was also known for his curiosity, and to mention Audre Lorde an American poet. Many other names tp many to list are/were all successful. Curiosity can be something very positive and can help you become a successful person. Parents should not kill their Children's curiosity.

Here are 4 ways curiosity makes some people highly successful:

1. Number 1: curiosity allows us to think in depth. Mental skill coach Carrie Cheadle, Works with athletes that are facing setbacks, and she says that, she helps them work on their problems like scientist. Scientists were able to be become successful and inventions because of their curiosity. When you are curious, you start to think more in depth. And when you think in depth, you discover new things; your brain works; and helps you find solutions that you might not have thought off. Because curiosity makes you think in depth rather than staying on the surface, this is how you will tackle your obstacles.
2. Number two: curiosity leads to relationships. You shouldn't be an introvert. Introvert people usually are not very social. They don't have the curiosity to ask questions to know you more and no more about your life details. But we say it when someone just answers the question and doesn't involve much in a conversation. If you are in a gathering, try to talk with anyone! Ask questions, meet new people, ask questions about their work. This helps you create relationships that might help you one day. Connections and relationships are very important in life. Your curiosity helps you build these relations. Being curious about others' paths, genuinely curious, will enable you to make long lasting relationships.
3. Number 3: Curiosity makes you an interesting person. Curious people love to know everything. Curious people are always thinking and working their brains. And the mind is like a muscle that becomes stronger through continual exercises. Meaning curiosity is your mental exercise and makes our brain stronger. When your brain is thinking it means you are trying to find solutions to questions. And this makes you an interesting person. Because you are a person that is knowledgeable and can talk about several things, people get attracted to ones perspective. At the end of the day, the more we know, the more we want to know.

4. Number four: And this one is my absolute favorite. Of course, we all grew up watching cartoons where the hero is very strong, smart, and handsome. But became like that because he suffered a lot at the beginning of this life. Like Tarzan. His parent's death and the adoption by the apes turned him into the tough guy. Even Kwai Chang Caine also struggled. In each case, the hero has no choice but to become special. Just like Tarzan, Kwai, and Mulan; their curiosity to become better, their curiosity to learn, and their curiosity to learn everything, is what made them successful. Stepping outside of your surroundings, of what feels comfortable, meeting new people, having unusual experiences, then coming home with an amazing set of skills is what will make you a successful person. Successful doesn't mean being rich or wealthy. The happier you are in your life, the more successful you are.
